

Editorial Introduction to the First Issue,

On behalf of the Board, it is an honor that I am delighted to announce the publication of the first issue of the Journal of Economics and Business Issues (JEBI). Introduction of this new journal would not have been possible without the important contributions from the Editorial Board members.

This Journal has been nearly two years in the making. It was a natural outgrowth of the expansion of the academic research potential especially in the emerging countries.

The board decided that the journal should be published as an open-access online journal. It was also decided that we would endeavor to publish two issues a year: the autumn issue and the spring issue.

This journal targets to offer a common platform for researchers to share their original research and the latest developments in in business finance, business accounting, business management, economics, public finance, fiscal policy, labor economics, and econometrics contributing to the national and international social sciences literature. The journal aspires to function as an international forum within the editorial focus, with a determination to disseminate the results promising scientific excellence.

Most of all, thanks are due to my co-editor Ph-D Nuri Hacıevliyagil who have so generously given their time and expertise to make this project happen. I also thank the board members of this first issue who admirably give their valuable support as we put in place our workflows while at the same time going into production.
